Dulce de leche is a spread made with milk, sugar, and vanilla extract. After the process of caramelizing milk and adding the other two ingredients, you get this tasty, soft, and brown-ish spread.

Of course, there are some variations, like it happens with every food: more or less sweet, softer or harder, darker or lighter. These variations exist for two reasons. First, for the personal taste of people. And second, it might be better for it to be harder or softer depending on how we're going to use it. But we'll get into that later...
